A drop of mucilaire between each leaf held all firmly together at the edge of one of the left-hand petals.

Oysters were already on the table when the guests assembled, but on each leaf of the little flower books was a conundrum in verse, the answer to which would give the name of each course in turn, thus fornishing a novel menu. While enjoying one course the ladies amuse themselves by trying to guess the one next in order, and the answers were in each case correctly

A MINK TRAGEDY.

The Mysterious Close of the Life of a Crael Animal. For a couple of months I have been trying to solve the problem of a dead mink I found lying in my barn on my return home. The mink had been dead but a short time, and had no wounds upon it except at the throat where two small holes had let out its life blood. How it came to this end has troubled me ever since, says a correspondent of Forest and Stream. There were no cats in the barn, and well, during my absence from home. I at length concluded that two male minks must have had a quarrel in the becoming magnanimity that he was barn and one had become a victim of

SHOOT ONLY AT ONE THING. Hunters as Well as Other Professionals Mave Their Specialties. me people as peculiar

That there is such a thing as a specialty among professional hunters a man can shoot at one thing he can at another. But such is not the case, save only that, but by trying all kinds of game a hunter may ruin himself for all. The man who hunts snipe is generally torough when his wasons If he shoets any other game it is for his own use. He some days sends in two hundred birds as the result of ones day's work. Strings of eighty, ninety, and one hundred are not infrequent. His harvest is at the season of the year when the birds soll at two dollars and fifty cents and three delines a dozen. The duck hunter is also of a class to bimself. This is particularly true of the wood-duck hunter. The chicken and quail hunters are generally the same, and in large part they are known as farmers. Deer and wild turkey also go together. They are found in the same section of country and at the same time. Their turkeys average them over one dollar each, and when they run seroes a first it is an easy matter to get ten or twelve out of it. This hunter is supposed to spend the balance of the year in chopping railroad ties on government land, drinking moonships and keeping out of the ways of revenue officers. The weodosck hunters also stand out alone. Squirrels and rabbits alone are hunted by anybody and everybody:

AT THE PHONE.

Emperor William Imelog His Imperial Orders by Wires.

Emperer William II. has his own imperial way of using the telephone, says the Appeal-Avalanche. Bespite mistakes caused by the emperor's refusal to name himself at the opening of his conversation, as other people do, he invariably introduces his telephoned orders, merely with the words: "I command that," and so forth. As soon as a chief of department heurs these words he motions that his subordinates must at once leave the room.

The significance of this arrangement is supposed to be that the olded is having comething like an andience with his majesty, and that it would be presumptuous for a person not summoned to hear the imperial voice to eccupy the room into which its tones are co veyed. At the end of the conversation the emperor walks away without saying "goodby," and the calef with whora he has conversed must listen for five or six minutes afterward to make sure that the imperial orders have been completed. Then he calls back his assistants, and the usual etiquetto is
